

will here relate what I had t,h« opportunity of leanun< respecting the conduct of Louis XVIII. after his depart.ur from France; this will naturally brinjj me to the end o November, 1807, at which tiim* I read in tin* Alwillt tin Non* published on the 9th of the sain month, that the ('unite d Lille and the Due d'Angoilem* had set off for England.

The Comte de Provence,¹ as Louis" title then went, lef Paris on the 21st of June, 17U1. He eonstaiit.Iv expresses his wish of keeping as near as possible to the frontiers o France. Pie at first took up his abode at Cohlentx, and knew from good authority that all the emigrants did no regard him with a favorable t*ye. They could not, pardoi the wise principles he had professed at a period, when then was yet time to prevent, by reasonable concession, the misfor tunes which imprudent irritation brought upon France*. Whei the emigrants, after the campaign of 17iH', passed the Rhine the Comte de Provence, resided in the little town of Ham or the Lippe, where he remained until he was persuaded tha the people of Toulon had called him to Provence. As hi could not, of course, pass through France, Monsieur repairci to the Court of his father-in-law, the Kiny; of Sardinia, hopinj, to embark at Genoa, and from thenee to reaeh the east o Provence. But the evacuation of Toulon, where the nam< of P>onaparte wjis fortlie iirst time sounded by the breath o fame, having taken place be For*' lie was able to leav<* Turin Monsieur remained there four months, at I he expiration o! which time, his father-in-law intimated to him the imjio.s.sibil ity of his remaining long(*r in the Sardinian States, He \v;u afterwards permitted to resid at Verona,, where he heard oi Louis X.VI.*s death. After ri*inuiin»i(two years in that, eity the. Senate of Venice forbard his presence in the Venetian States. Thus forced to quit Italy the {"ornte rep.'dred to thr army of Condi'.

The cold and timid policy of the Austrian Cabinet afforded no asylum to the Comte de Provence, and he wan obliged tr pans through (Jennany; yet, as Louis XVI If, repeated ovei and over again, ever ninee tin* Restoration, " ih* ne?er in-
